WHAT LOCAL FRUIT GROWERS NEED.

From a Standard subscriber in Virginia City, Mont., comes the suggestion that the following might be turned to advantage in this fruit region:

"Bitter Root valley men are experimenting with a vacuum fruit drying machine. They plan to dry such portions of the products of their orchards as cannot be marketed as fancy grades. The machine removes the water from the fruit by vacuum pressure. The cores are used for cider vinegar and thus there is no waste of any part of the fruit. It takes from six to seven pounds of apples when fresh to make one pound of dried. Three pounds of prunes and three and four of cherries, six or eight of strawberries make one pound of dried."

These new methods should be investigated by our fruit growers who find themselves in the position of producing the very best fruit in the United States and yet are unable to market at an advantage because their fresh fruits when shipped are perishable and, knowing this, the weakness, deliberately set about to force the shippers to sacrifice their goods.

The Standard has seen the necessity of the fruit growers developing the publicity end of their business and has thought somewhat of opening a regular department in this paper for the benefit of the orchardist, through the medium of which new methods of preserving fruits and new systems of marketing might be considered and a general exchange of views take place.

The fruit men are in need of unity of action and the educational benefits of a publicity campaign, either through the medium of a paper of their own or a column devoted to their interests in a paper like the Standard.

DEMOCRATIC SENATOR PRAISES REED SMOOT.

Senator Reed Smoot is admired even by his political opponents, who admit his ability as a legislator and a leader in congress. Here is a statement from C. S. Thomas, United States senator from Colorado, made when the Underwood tariff bill was under discussion:

"I differ radically on almost every public proposition with the senator from Utah (Mr. Smoot), but his powers of application and industry and his close attendance to public business have commanded my admiration ever since I have been a member of this body."

"He is a bitter partisan, but he fights fairly and in the open. He fought the tariff bill in its beginning to its ending. It encountered his unrelenting opposition, and yet he wanted to see that bill, as to its details as perfect as possible, since he could not prevent its enactment."

"I want here and now to acknowledge my sense of obligation to Senator Smoot, because during the consideration of that bill he gave many extremely plausible suggestions and much desirable information, much of which I was glad to avail myself of, and which was incorporated in the bill."

"I think the senator from Utah is entitled to this statement and to its appearance in the Record to the end that he at least may be free from the charge or imputation of unduly flinching against important legislation. Certain it is that no one is more amenable to his public duties than the senator from Utah."

SUFFERING CAUSED BY THE WAR.

Simple stories from the war zone give us our most vivid impressions of the terrible distress which prevails and the misery of every class of society.

From the Christian Herald we reproduce the following as an illustration:

Mrs. Whitney Warren, of 16 East Forty-seventh street, New York, tells of what she saw in Paris: "At the railway stations you see great throngs of women and children getting off from the trains, clad in their wooden shoes and kerchiefs. They are dirty and travel-stained. But beside these is a constant stream coming through the different gates of the city who have walked from all over northern and northeastern France. They are received by committees who gather them together in some central place and care for them there until they can find where they belong. In many cases, children have arrived alone, separated from their mothers, and not knowing where they came from. "I met an old woman near the gate, and asked her how far she had come. She held up her hands to show me two hundred miles. She was too weary to speak. 'Have you any money?' I asked. She shook her head. I gave her forty cents and told her where she could hire a mattress for ten cents to sleep on in one of the halls."

One of the most painful effects of the war in Germany is the throwing out of employment of thousands of Protestant clergymen. Their parishes are broken up by the severing of families and the general movement towards the larger towns, and they are left without homes and destitute. These middle-aged men and their families are thus dependent by hundreds on the bare charity of their neighbors, or the pittance which comes from public funds. They have not the meager allowance of thirteen cents a day, which women receive who are wives, mothers, or sisters of soldiers, with half that amount for each child, but these clergymen's families must exist on almost nothing. While thirteen cents may seem a small allowance to Americans, we must remember that soups, black bread, and cabbage go a long way to sustain life, although such articles as eggs and other semi-luxuries have a tendency to mount up in price. In Hamburg, an egg costs twenty-five cents.

REMEMBER THE CHILDREN OF EUROPE.

Our peace parade on next Friday, under the inspiration of the club women of Ogden, should be accompanied by a movement in favor of Ogden joining in the sending of Christmas presents to the sorrowing children of Europe.

The government has offered to carry the gifts on a warship which is to leave New York the latter part of November.

The Standard will help in the cause by attempting to arrange for the free transportation of the presents from Ogden to New York, if the women of this city will take charge of the collecting of gifts, which should be useful and yet pleasing to children. Care should be taken to see that all articles are disinfected in order to avoid transmitting scarlet fever, diphtheria, measles or any other contagious or infectious disease to the homes already deeply afflicted.

WHAT THE WAR IS COSTING IN LIVES.

British officers in France are being killed and wounded at the rate of 18 a day. Since the beginning of the war, 1,300 officers have been included in the casualty lists.

This is the most serious loss the British forces have endured, as officers cannot be replaced. If the casualties continue, within six months Great Britain will not have commanders for the new army which is being formed.

On the sea, the German submarines have been killing the British naval forces by the slow process of 30 a day from the first day of the war. That is not a very large fatality for any one day, but the total is growing to large proportions, and it must be rather distressing that each day England must contribute 30 sons of her empire to the Germans submarine.

But those losses are as nothing when compared with the deaths in the trenches. We estimate the German killed and wounded in France alone as close to half a million men, with at least 300,000 for the allies. The German heaviest casualties have been in repeated frontal attacks.

OGDEN SHOULD DEVELOP WINTER SPORTS.

A year ago the Standard said Ogden did not make the most of the winter sports which could be followed in this region and pointed out that mountain climbing on snow shoes and skiing might be made a part of our enjoyment greatly to the good of our own people and the advertising of the winter charm of our outdoor life. Along this same line, the Journal of the American Medical Association devotes much space to telling of the benefits of winter sports, particularly mountain climbing, declaring:

In several respects mountain climbing is a peculiarly wholesome form of athletic sport for the large number of persons whose vocations are sedentary. The indoor life which these persons commonly lead and the restrictions of even the slightest rigors of climate which their mode of housing and places of work afford them are more than likely to render them oversensitive to the extremes of weather. It is for precisely such unexposed persons that an occasional trip to the highlands and an alpine excursion has most refreshing recuperation and stimulus in store. The heart is called on to exert itself to a degree which, in an otherwise healthy subject, will be followed only by the invigorating characteristic of most exercise. The advantage is not confined to a single organ; for the respiratory mechanism, the entire musculature of the body as well as the cardiac and circulatory apparatus, and the general metabolic processes apparently benefit in ways not readily definable in accurate scientific terms. In addition to an indefinable feeling of well-being, considerable skill is acquired in certain of the performance of mountain climbing or other feats of alpine sport. The combination has shown its wholesome and invigorating influence on many an individual suffering from the 'fag' of a life of physical inactivity.

There was a time when the patronage of the mountain resorts was confined to the summer months. Today winter sports attract visitors to the same surroundings. It is not as a rule, the invalids who sit on porches or the lethargic aged who are found visiting the highland regions in winter, but rather those who are ready to participate vigorously in the pastimes that call for muscular exertion and endurance. Zuntz of Berlin has recently investigated the effect of a rather severe outing and mountain climb in the depths of winter on a large group of physicians ranging in age from 20 to 60. Their testimony may be assumed to be based on intelligent, trained observation. The evidence indicated that even very unusual degrees of muscular activity under environmental conditions making extreme demands on the heat-regulating apparatus of the body—as happens during mountaineering in a snow-storm—are as a rule without detriment to the participants. On the contrary, even a sedentary person unaccustomed to either the exercise or the rigor of the climate may actually exhibit benefits. Those who are free from addiction to alcoholic beverages and are somewhat used to moderate daily exercise seem to enjoy the exhilaration most keenly. Even the untrained, however, who have found the unusual demands on their muscular and circulatory apparatus rather strenuous and sometimes unpleasant, may feel the beneficial after-effects, expressed in improved cardiac and vasomotor functions.

It is not claimed, says The Journal of the American Medical Association, that the "snow-sports" are ideal for all. Common sense would forbid such a sweeping dictum; but precisely as the night air, and sleeping in the open all year around have been shown by modern practices to be without danger, so winter sports even in a severely cold climate may be utilized in outdoor life, even without preparatory training for a supposedly dangerous hygienic undertaking.

CHICAGO GRAIN

Chicago, Oct. 17.—Bullish reports about the Australian crop helped make the wheat market today continue to advance. It was said the total yield in Australia would be 75,000,000 bushels short, compared with that of the previous twelve months and would virtually wipe out any chance of exports. Estimates that world shipments next week would be less than the average required were also adverse to the bears. After opening unchanged to 3-4c higher, the market steadied not far from the top level reached.

Corn hardened with wheat. Shorts did most of the buying. The start, which was the same as last night to 1-4c up, was followed by some additional gains.

Scarciness of country offerings tended to strengthen oats. Trade, however, was light.

Provisions had only indifferent support. Predictions were current of an increase in hog receipts here next week and at other packing centers. An additional upturn in wheat ensued because of the large export business in progress here and at Kansas City and Duluth. The close was nervous at 7-8 to 1-38c net advance.

In the last half of the session the corn bulge became more pronounced. Closing prices were unsettled, 3-4 to 7-8c above last night.

Don't Be a Victim of Substitution

There is but one genuine ROUND OAK stove. For over forty years the Round Oak Folks have concentrated their efforts in the production of this heater, which is today, in principle, scientifically correct. The prestige of this stove has stimulated over one hundred other manufacturers to imitate it in appearance and name, but as every imitation is always inferior to the original, so has it been with the imitations of this strong, simple, durable heater, which has always "delivered the goods."

Burns all fuels successfully and economically. Holds the fire forty-eight hours, and gives a lifetime of service. So well recognized is the prestige and value of this stove, that after fifteen or twenty years of service, it brings more, second-hand, than cheap imitations do on the dealer's floor.

Insist on securing the original. We recommend and sell it.
